What Reform?

Editor:

Thank you for your article on the Affordable Care Act in Humboldt ("The Faces of Obamacare," March 6). I, like Jude Ehrlich, am thrilled to have health insurance after five years of going without. I am self-employed and eligible for government subsidies for the same basic plan I purchased until it became unaffordable.

I was astounded to hear that the only available Covered California insurance providers in our county refuse to reimburse providers a reasonable amount for services they used to pay for. I think this is yet more evidence that a single-payer system that cuts insurance companies out of the picture entirely is the only way to provide medical coverage to all. The corporate greed of insurance companies clearly outweighs what small amount of concern they may have for the well-being of their insured.

To my mind, providing a windfall for insurance companies by increasing their policies at the government's expense was an apparently necessary evil in getting any health care reform passed. The first step in reform, said many. And yet Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield seem to interpret their monopoly over insurance coverage to make a power grab for even more profits for themselves, at the expense of patients, providers and everyone else in this country's broken health care system.

Perhaps the corporate greed that seems to run our country makes true health care reform impossible. I believe Obama has the desire to provide something better for our population, but we as a voting populace lack the political will and compassion to move beyond the drive to make money for a few.

Support Jail Change

Editor:

As moderator of the Feb. 26 community discussion regarding the Eureka jail's nighttime release policy I would like to suggest a course of action the community could immediately implement to enhance resolution of this issue.

As quoted in the Journal ("Free to Go," March 6), Sheriff Mike Downey repeatedly voiced his concern regarding the legality and practicality of holding inmates until daylight business hours. He mentioned that a previous attempt at changing state law (SB 153 proposed in February 2009 by Senator Carol Liu) had failed.

On Jan. 6, of this year Senator Liu introduced a refined bill, SB 833, once again addressing late-night jail release. It would delete the section of the current Penal Code which states:

"The Sheriff may discharge any prisoner from the county jail at such time on the last day such prisoner may be confined as the sheriff shall consider to be in the best interests of the prisoner."

And replace it with:

"(a) Upon completion of a sentence

So forgiveness can kiss Nietzsche

He polishes his face of glass
Gleaming bright
In every false light
Reflecting all he wants to see
Except his mouth
Is an open grave
And eyes line his coat
Like double-breasted buttons.

A faithless kiss
Damp and cold
Lips apart
For all to see
Hanged itself
From a straggled tree.

Each of us
Chooses truth
Whose truth becomes our own
And brazen masks
Must fall
Into a porcelain shatter
So forgiveness
Can kiss Nietzsche.

— Robin Hodson

served by a prisoner or the release of a prisoner ordered by the court to be effected the same day... the sheriff may offer a voluntary program to the prisoner that would allow that prisoner to stay in the custody facility for up to 16 additional hours or until normal business hours, whichever is shorter, in order to offer the prisoner the ability to be discharged to a treatment center or during daytime hours.

(b) This section does not prevent the early release of prisoners as otherwise allowed by law or allow jails to retain prisoners any longer than otherwise required by law without the prisoners' express written consent."

The bill is set for hearing by the Senate Public Safety Committee on March 25. Please write our state Senator Noreen Evans, 710 E. Street #150, Eureka, CA 95501, or call her office 707-445-6508 and urge her to support this bill.

Steaks and Trails

Editor:

I agreed with Chris Turner when he wrote about what the elimination of trail-supporting language from the GPU actually does ("Mailbox," Feb. 27). I believe in the potential to draw both locals and out-of-towners to our trails.

However, I do not agree with two of his statements. Shamus T-Bones is doing well because they serve delicious food, and eating there is fun (where else can you see physics at play?), not just because they are located near a trail. And unless you have seen and counted the fence-breakers at Vista Point in McKinleyville, you can't blame out-of-towners for the damage. When was the last time you broke a fence when you were travelling? Never, I'll bet.

Let's agree on the usefulness of the trails. I'll go for a walk and go to Shamus T-Bones, and I promise not to break any fences.

Comment of the Week

"Scott-Goforth seems to have a problem. He categorizes Kerrigan supporters as 'lefties' and based on Kerrigan saying the county is awaiting its 'Eureka moment' said his speech was Eureka-centric. Either Scott-Goforth is a very poor reporter or is writing on a very slanted desk."

I'm Still Worried

This week's cover story is a scholarly write-up by Journal News Editor Thadeus Greenson about the General Plan Update process — and how money may or may not influence decisions. He started with a public records act request to county supervisors for emails during a specific time period last year when they were changing the GPU “guiding principles” adopted 10 years before. (That action is still the most egregious vote this board has taken so far — changing long-established rules used by the previous planning commission to hold hearings and complete the draft GPU.)

While Thad was finishing his nuanced piece Monday afternoon, the supervisors were in a raucous session at the courthouse on the same topic — the GPU. Over two hours, more than 30 speakers came to the podium to chastise the supervisors to their face. What are you doing? You've had the finished plan since 2012. You've had 30 more meetings. You gave it back to the Planning Commission? ... This is a disgusting mess. There was a consensus. ... Take the plan back, finish it and move on.

If the speakers were harsh on the supervisors, they were harsher on the county planning commissioners, especially its new super majority of builders and property rights activists. These commissioners made significant changes to the plan between January and last week when they turned it back over to the board. Speakers were particularly angry about votes to weaken stream protection and to remove the goal of a countywide trail system from the open space element, specifics they want to see supervisors put back in.

When public comments closed, supervisors said they got the message. Fifth District Supervisor Ryan Sundberg, one of the 3-2 majority who voted to send the GPU back to the planning commission, said, “I wouldn’t do it again. It needs to come back to the board to finish the process.” Fourth District Supervisor Virginia Bass agreed. “I’m taking responsibility,” she said. “It didn’t work.” First District Supervisor Rex Bohn shrugged his shoulders and said if he were right all the time, he “would make sure you all got to keep your insurance,” a swipe at the troubled rollout of the Affordable Care Act and completely off topic. (Supervisors Mark Lovelace and Estelle Fennell, representing the county’s 3rd and 2nd districts, respectively, were in the minority in that January vote to send the GPU’s Open Space and Conservation element to the planning commission.)

So on Monday, the supervisors did the right thing, took responsibility and made promises to finish the GPU job, right? So why am I still plenty worried?

Because last week I picked up a copy of the latest Humboldt Coalition for Property Rights publication inserted in the Times-Standard and it’s a bit frightening. As readers will recall, HumCPR is one of several private corporations formed in recent years to influence public policy. They work outside any public scrutiny. The current planning commission has at least two HumCPR members — founder Lee Ulansey and former treasurer Robert Morris. I say at least, because HumCPR’s member list is private. And we know that HumCPR has become a powerful political force, having successfully backed four of the five sitting supervisors’ campaigns.

In the latest edition, HumCPR takes on water rights, frivolous lawsuits against the county (even though HumCPR initiated two of them), shaded parcels, trails and more water rights. They also have a Q&A with all five supervisors and the first question is, “What is your perspective on how the General Plan is coming along?”

Bohn says he “appreciates” the Planning Commission taking another look. Fennell is “happy with the progress.” Bass says, “The majority of community members understands and appreciates the very deliberate process we are going through.” And Sundberg is “very pleased with how we are progressing.” Lovelace, the lone supervisorial candidate to withstand a challenger backed by HumCPR, said bluntly, “How’s it going? Not good.”

I’m with Mark on this one.

The only two supervisors up for reelection this year are Sundberg and Bass. I think they are probably unbeatable for many reasons I’ll save for a future column. But I am very grateful that two challengers stepped forward last week. There will be contested races in both the 4th and 5th districts. There will be important questions asked and hopefully answered.

Right now we do not have a board of supervisors that adequately reflects the values of our Humboldt community. And we have a planning commission that’s worse. ●

And They're Off

A late, curious start for 4th and 5th district challengers

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

After rumor mongering, plodding, hemming, hawing, and perhaps some behind the scenes prodding, there will be a supervisors race after all.

On March 7, former Eureka Councilman Chris Kerrigan announced his candidacy for the county's 4th District seat via a short speech on the steps of the County Elections Office. Backed by several notable Humboldt County lefties, Kerrigan said "Humboldt is waiting for its Eureka moment," to the crowd's applause.

Meanwhile, McKinleyville's Sharon Latour, who oversees the Arcata Presbyterian congregation, has been relatively silent about her 5th District bid so far, filing all the necessary paperwork by deadline but failing to return multiple calls placed over the last five days.

If the late filings are any indication, there's been a bit of reluctance to take on current supervisors Virginia Bass (4th District) and Ryan Sundberg (5th District), though there's been grumbling from some county residents unhappy with the incumbents.

In an interview following his Friday rally, Kerrigan admitted it will be difficult to unseat Bass. "I feel like this is a David vs Goliath battle," he said. "But I think that my plans and vision for the county will resonate with Humboldt County voters and 4th District voters."

Kerrigan had announced his candidacy for Eureka mayor back in December, and explained that he broadened his political ambitions because of recent stagnation of the GPU and Bass' appointment of Kevin McKenny to the county planning commission. "As I began to talk with people and talk about the issues that were affecting Eureka residents," Kerrigan said, "I realized I could make the most impact on the board of supervisors."

McKenny owns the long-defunct Downtowner Motel on F Street, and some residents expressed outrage when he was placed on the commission despite his failure to revamp the motel.

Kerrigan went directly after Bass, both in his speech and in discussing his platform afterward, saying she ran on the promise of completing the general plan.

"It's difficult to ask investors to invest in our economy when we don't have a plan to move forward," Kerrigan said. "In addition to that, her appointment to the planning commission of the owner of the Downtowner Motel really demonstrated a lack of guidance, of forethought."

Kerrigan said the county needs to focus on guidelines and parameters for development to avoid taking timber and agricultural land out of production, focusing development on "where we have existing infrastructure and blighted property that need to be fixed up, as opposed to our gulches and greenways."

Kerrigan is on the Boys and Girls Club of Eureka board of directors, and served on the Eureka City Council from ages 20 to 28 before reaching his term limit. After that he went to Humboldt State University, earning his bachelor's degree in political science. "There's a certain amount of life experience in my 20s that I didn't have," he said. "I needed that time to rebuild a strength of spirit, focus on myself."

Bass defended her board's progress with the general plan update as she announced her bid for re-election on Feb. 7, telling a crowd gathered in front of the courthouse to expect "additional creative and proactive steps toward reducing homelessness, empowering the neighborhoods and providing access to those in the community who need access" if she's re-elected.

Bass, the former owner of O-H's Townhouse, Eureka councilwoman and mayor, defeated longtime supervisor Bonnie Neely in 2010, taking 55 percent of the vote.

Sundberg's 2010 election to the board — in which he defeated Patrick Cleary in a much tighter 50.57 percent to 49.04 percent vote — followed his years of service on the Trinidad Rancheria's Tribal Council. In his re-election announcement, Sundberg told the Mad River Union he supported creating jobs and making sure the county doesn't stand in the way of that goal.

Both Sundberg and Bass have received endorsements from a variety of notables in their re-election bids.

Sharon Latour's been notably silent since confirming her campaign March 3 to the Lost Coast Outpost — her only public comment on the 5th District race so far. One of her campaign managers explained Tuesday that Latour was out of town on a previous arrangement and unable to comment by press deadline. Questions about her public service experience, political ambitions and view of county politics remain unanswered at this point, but her background, according to her resume and a 2010 interview with Examiner.com, is diverse: student, professor, pastor, military educator, jock.

Latour told an Examiner.com interviewer she'd wanted to be a minister since a childhood in a Catholic school, eventually abandoning Catholicism after a 10-year Air Force career when she realized she "wanted to be all about peace."

She oversaw "values education" at Maxwell Air Force Base in the mid-1990s before moving on to career and faculty development. "The major reason I joined the Air Force was because I felt that we all sort of owed a little debt for our freedom and then I ended up really loving it," she told Examiner.com. The U.S. invasion of Iraq convinced her to retire. Her Air Force pension, according to the interview, allowed her to take a position as the Garberville Presbyterian Church pastor in 2007 with no salary. She wrote a column for Southern Humboldt's Redwood Times during her stint at the church before taking positions as the Arcata Presbyterian Church leader and an adjunct professor of women's studies at College of the Redwoods. According to her resume, Latour has a Bachelor of Arts degree, four masters degrees and a Ph.D in physical education administration and leadership theory.

Latour's columns and Examiner interview also reveal some of her thoughts on faith. "Literal interpretation takes the mystery away from the thought process and I think it is wonderful that we can have differences in understanding," she said. "Faith and religion are personal as is our relationship with God and Jesus. Yes there is the guidebook of the Bible but it is our faith that makes the relationship real to us."

If there's one indication of the uphill battle that Latour and Kerrigan face, it's the powerful war chests built up by Bass and Sundberg's campaigns. Going into 2014, Bass had nearly $60,000 in campaign funds. Sundberg had nearly $42,000.

Earthquake and Record Rainfall

Humboldt County got a good jolt on the night of March 9 when an earthquake struck off the coast, west of Ferndale.

Folks throughout northern California reported feeling the 6.8 quake that hit about 10:18 p.m. some 48 miles off the coast. Most reported feeling a gentle rolling that lasted more than 30 seconds. Humboldt State University Geology Associate Professor Mark Hemphill-Haley said the quake occurred on the Gorda Plate, an oceanic plate that is crumbling as its being subducted under North America and which accounts for 85 to 90 percent of the seismic activity felt on the North Coast.

While Hemphill-Haley said it is true there was a 90 percent chance the area would experience an aftershock of 5.0 or higher in the week following the quake, he said that's based on a statistical formula and the probability of experiencing such a quake is steadily decreasing. Still, a total 16 aftershocks measuring 3.0 or greater were recorded in the area between the time of the quake and 8:30 a.m. the following day, according to the United States Geological Survey.

No tsunami warning followed the temblor, but Hemphill-Haley said some folks evacuated from low-lying areas, which he said was smart. The recommendation, he said, is that people leave low-lying areas for higher ground any time they feel more than 15 seconds of strong motion. People on the coast, he said, should get moving toward higher elevation as soon as they feel any shaking at all.

The earthquake trumped news that the day's rainfall broke a 30-plus year record. Scott Carroll, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service, said Eureka recorded 2.58 inches of rain that day, smashing March 9's previous record of 1.17 inches in 1983. The precipitation onslaught brings the area up to 52 percent of normal rainfall levels for the current water year, which runs through June 30.

Eureka City Manager Selected

Meet the new boss: West Des Moines, Iowa, City Manager Greg Sparks has accepted the Eureka city manager position and is scheduled to start May 1, after a background check is completed.

NEW EUREKA CITY MANAGER
GREG SPARKS

Sparks hit the two key Eureka talking points in a city press release issued March 6: economy and scenery.

"The area has great natural assets and a strong retail base," he said. "I was impressed with the team of dedicated department managers and I look forward to working with them to achieve the council's goals of excellent customer service. I look forward to arriving soon and getting to know people in the community and to be an active participant in Eureka."

West Des Moines, in case you're into comparisons, has a population of nearly 60,000 and is the 10th largest city in Iowa. According to Wikipedia, it is one of the state's wealthiest cities and "Des Moines' richest suburb." West Des Moines also made Money magazine's 2008 list of the "100 Best Places to Live and Launch." Eureka, you'll recall, is a primo spot for swingin' seniors. (See

"Blog Jammin'," Feb 6.)

Sparks has held management positions around the U.S., according to the release, and has three kids living in California.

COURTS

Stabbing Case Still Front and Center in DA Race

Juan Ferrer's plea deal in the stabbing death of an Arcata man continues to be a huge issue in the campaign to become Humboldt County's next district attorney.

Arnie Klein, a former prosecutor and one of four candidates vying for the seat being vacated by Paul Gallegos, issued a press release March 6 stating he's been contacted by the victim's family and asked to intervene in the case. Specifically, Klein claims the family has requested that he ask the court to throw out Ferrer's involuntary manslaughter plea when he appears for sentencing April 3.

Ferrer was initially charged with murder for the stabbing death of Douglas Anderson-Jordet on Nov. 25, but his attorney, Marek Reavis, reached an agreement with prosecuting Deputy District Attorney Elan Firpo, a candidate to become the county's next top prosecutor. Under the agreement, Ferrer pleaded no contest to aggravated involuntary manslaughter and will likely serve two years in county jail.

Just Because You're Paranoid

By Grant Scott-Goforth and Thadeus Greenson

Last week your author mentioned that several recent studies indicate marijuana use can cause problems with teenagers' developing brains, lowering IQs of chronic users during their transition to adulthood.

It's easy to point out that highly successful people have confessed to marijuana use in their formative years — world leaders, captains of industry, artists, actors and authors. It's a good point: Marijuana use as a youth (or an adult — more and more baby boomers are using marijuana regularly, according to the Huffington Post) isn't necessarily going to turn you into a bottom-feeding dropout welfare suck. Making us aware of this is the apparent goal of the "2013 Top 50 Marijuana Users," a list compiled by the Marijuana Policy Project and referenced by Lost Coast Outpost resident pot zealot Emily Hobelmann (who points to the list to evince that Gov. Jerry Brown's concern about pot use is either some kind of long con or an indication of his lack of mental acuity).

At first glance, the list seems to blow smoke in the face of those who say youthful pot smoking is harmful. But under some scrutiny, it does the pro-pot brigade no favors. Many of those on the list have denounced smoking weed and, in the snippets of confessions gathered by the MMP, many admit to only occasional use — long, long ago. Is it fair to call these people "Marijuana Users?" I think not.

Trying pot a dozen times in your youth and then giving it up does not make you an influential marijuana user. Nor does it reach the level of chronic use that studies show might yield negative effects on users. (I understand that some of these authorities may downplay their use to the press, but let's take them at their word.) So it's disingenuous to say that marijuana can't harm people because it didn't harm Brad Pitt's ability to make a lot of money. That's a real stretch of correlation and causality. (Plus, the list quotes Brad Pitt as saying he quit smoking marijuana so he could recover from depression and become a better father — not the most compelling pro-pot propaganda from an "influential user.")

Do you suffer from paranoia when you're high? Does getting on the phone, handing over your credit card info and signing up for a cryptic psychotherapy session sound like the best solution?

Well, lucky you! Paranoidhuman.com is here to save the day! Because nothing instills confidence in the paranoid and conspiracy-threatened stoner than an abstruse website asking for your credit card information while featuring jittery gifs and stylized images of children and women's heads splattered across cheap wallpaper.

The program is ostensibly designed to help the stoner overcome marijuana's anxiety-inducing side effects through consultation with a "Marijuana Paranoia Management Coach" (Only $262.50 for a five-hour session!). Wanna know what that actually means? Buy the book first (Only $19.99 on Amazon!).

Or here's an idea: Give up pot. If it doesn't make you feel good, don't use it.

Yes, people use marijuana as medicine — often a safer, cheaper alternative to other pain relievers. There are lots of local, above-board people offering anxiety consulting (free of pharmaceuticals, if preferred). But paranoidhuman.com doesn't even pretend to advocate for patients.

In the website's FAQ, the company's nameless proprietors promise:

"Being able to cut back on the alcohol and incorporate marijuana as a safer, and more productive social/recreational relaxant means you'll save cash. It's true. And furthermore, you're going to need this cash to buy heroin after marijuana opens the gateway to harder, more dangerous drugs."

I guess/hope that last bit is supposed to be a joke? Sigh.

Supervisors Chamber at the Humboldt County Courthouse was chalk full of weed stank the night of March 6 as droves of pot advocates turned out to weigh in on the proposed outdoor marijuana grow ordinance being considered by the county planning commission. The ordinance — which proposes limiting outdoor patient grows to five mature plants on properties between a half-acre and five acres in size — seeks to limit the negative impacts medicinal grows have on neighbors, including that pungent, skunky smell, which was oh-so-prevalent at the meeting. The planning commission will get another whiff of the issue when they again take up the ordinance April 3. ●

ONLY TWO MEMBERS OF THE HUMBOLDT COUNTY PLANNING COMMISSION WERE SEATED IN MARCH 2012, WHEN THE COMMISSION VOTED TO SEND ITS DRAFT OF THE GENERAL PLAN UPDATE ON TO THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FOR REVIEW.

Money, politics and special interests intersect on the road map to Humboldt's future

thad@northcoastjournal.com

There are no two ways about it, Humboldt County is a unique place, says Kevin Hamblin. The county planning director is sitting in his office off H Street in Eureka on a recent afternoon, his window propped open a few inches to let in some fresh air and the sound of pouring rain. Many people move to this county, Hamblin explains, with no plan for being gainfully employed, and others stay here despite being chronically under-employed.

"People like living here," he says. "That points to the fact that we should look at our physical surroundings and be very protective of them." But, Hamblin goes on, people also leave the county all the time, frustrated by a lack of opportunity. "If you look around, it's not the most prosperous county," he says, adding that economic growth is always a top priority for policy makers. "Often times, those two needs are seen as kind of contrary, or opposed to each other." There's the rub.

The topic of the day is Humboldt County's perennially contentious General Plan Update, and Hamblin is explaining why it can be inherently divisive. This controversy has boiled over very publicly several times in the last six months, most recently with a series of planning commission votes in late February. Finally passing the update — 14 years in the making — will likely constitute an act of political courage from the supervisors. Almost nobody is happy with the current draft, which proponents say is reflective of just how much compromise was fostered in its creation, and any potential changes are almost sure to bring a public firestorm from one group or another looking to protect its interests.

Dressed in a gray dress shirt and slacks, Hamblin pauses a moment when asked to explain in common language what the general plan is and why the average Humboldt County resident should care about it. The plan is the underlying foundation of planning policy and zoning ordinances in the county, Hamblin says. "The General Plan Update is just a plan of where you are going — a statement of goals for the community," Hamblin says. Like many others, he refers to it as a "community vision" for the future.

Others are a bit more blunt. Ryan Emenaker, a political science professor at College of the Redwoods, says the update will have huge economic and political repercussions in the county for years. "Any decision where you're going to have winners and losers is inherently political," he says. "That's what politics is, in essence: choosing who gets what, when, where and how."

The general plan update attempts to answer those questions for the next 20 years.

That's what politics is, in essence: choosing who gets what, when, where and how.

— Ryan Emenaker, CR political science professor

The Humboldt County

Planning Commission voted unanimously on March 19, 2012 to send its draft of the General Plan Update on to the board of supervisors for review, closing a 12-year process seeking to overhaul an outdated document from 1984. The vote was a monumental step forward — a sign of progress in the process — but any momentum seems to have been slowed by a shift in the political makeup of the county's decision makers. Whether that's good or bad is the subject of vigorous debate but, of the seven commissioners who voted that March day, only two remain, Susan Masten and David Edmonds, who together have less than six years of experience. The five remaining commissioners have all been appointed in the last 14 months, three of them after being very critical of the draft GPU and the process that created it.

The turnover is largely the result of one of the biggest political reshufflings in recent Humboldt County memory. Running on campaigns that promised to improve the business climate in Humboldt County and that were backed by large donations from the real estate, development and construction industries, 4th District Supervisor Virginia Bass and 5th District Supervisor Ryan Sundberg won board seats in 2010. Running campaigns similarly speaking to the need for economic development and enjoying similar financial support, Rex Bohn and Estelle Fennell won seats in 2012, representing the county's 1st and 2nd districts, respectively.

The general plan played an interesting role in both election cycles, with the challenging candidates generally lamenting that the plan had taken too long and pledging to push it to completion. And yet the GPU wasn't the focal point of any of the campaigns, not overtly anyway. But the plan update process did help turn the Humboldt Coalition for Property Rights (HumCPR), a private corporation founded by current Planning Commissioner Lee Ulansey, into a major political force.

The coalition — which Ulansey launched after the county put a temporary moratorium on building permits for timber production zoned properties — boasts more than 4,000 members and became a central player in the GPU process, constantly lobbying for private property rights and less regulation. The group also became a key force in local campaigns, backing all winning supervisors in 2010 and 2012 with the exception of 3rd District Supervisor Mark Lovelace, who fended off the HumCPR-backed Karen Brooks to retain his board seat in 2012.

Over the last 14 months, the new board of supervisors has steadily reshaped the planning commission in its own image. Shortly after taking office, Fennell — a HumCPR-supported candidate who also served as the group's executive director for two years — appointed former HumCPR treasurer Robert Morris to the commission. Last year, the board voted to appoint Ulansey to fill a vacant at-large seat. Bass just appointed Eureka contractor and developer Kevin McKenny to the board last month. Shortly after taking office, Bohn replaced incumbent commissioner Denver Nelson — a retired neurosurgeon with experience in the logging, environmental, dairy and ranching communities — with Alan Bongio, owner of a local contracting company. In an interview with the Times-Standard at the time, Bohn reasoned: "We've gone almost 20 years without someone who pounded nails [on the commission]."

None of this should really be too surprising, says Emenaker, the political science professor at College of the Redwoods. After all, he explains, the by-appointment nature of the planning commission almost assures it's going to be reflective of the board. While the hope for these appointments is that supervisors will select the most competent and able person for the position, he says that is obviously open to interpretation. "The people you view as competent, or intelligent, are filtered through the lens through which you see the world," he explains, drawing a parallel to the process of appointing federal judges. "They're going to be reflective of your views."

Some have questioned the role of money in the process, especially when it comes to Ulansey's appointment. In 2010 and 2012, Ulansey personally donated at least $1,000 to the campaigns of Bass, Sundberg and Fennell. (He and his wife have also donated more than $3,500 to Bass and Sundberg's current re-election campaigns.) There's nothing in state law prohibiting supervisors from appointing a campaign donor to an important board or commission, or keeping a commissioner from donating to one of his boss' campaigns, according to John St. Croix, executive director of the San Francisco Ethics Commission. "There's no prohibition," he says. "But, obviously, that's why we have public filing of campaign contributions so the public is aware that those connections exist."

Folks looking closely at this year's filings will see some other connections as well, namely that Bass and Sundberg share support from similar sectors in their bids for re-election. Both are receiving donations from a handful of known HumCPR members (the bulk of the group's membership list is kept secret). They are also heavily supported by people and entities in the construction, development and real estate industries. According to forms filed with the Humboldt County Elections Office, 35 percent of the $39,076 Bass raised between July and December came from such donors, while those industries accounted for a whopping 70 percent of the $30,693 Sundberg raised in the filing period.

While many are fond of claiming that political donations buy influence, Emenaker isn't convinced. "The question often is what direction does the causality arrow go: Is it, 'I want to change that person's opinion so I'm going to give them money,' or is it, 'That person believes in the same things I do, so I'm going to give them money.'" In reality, Emenaker said he thinks the only thing campaign donations buy is increased access, noting that an official would likely be more giving of his or her time to a big-time supporter than an average constituent.

Bass just about says as much in an e-mail to Eureka City Councilwoman Marian Brady, defending a controversial Sept. 23 vote to modify the GPU's guiding principles. The board had just voted unanimously to modify Guiding Principle 4 from a revision several months earlier, adding a clause indicating the county would "discourage low-density residential conversion of resource lands and open spaces."

Brady sent Bass an e-mail a couple of days after the vote under the subject line "reminder of the imagine Humboldt visioning," referencing a series of community workshops that asked residents to envision Humboldt County in 2050. Brady cut and pasted some of the process' survey results into the e-mail, noting that many people moved to Humboldt County because of its natural beauty and rural lifestyle but said finding quality jobs was viewed as the region's greatest challenge. Brady then highlighted the following passage: "Fifty-one percent of the people answering the online survey thought the quality of life in Humboldt County would be worse in 2050 than it is today." She wrote, "Sounds like this scenario got lost in the guiding principles. Enlighten me if you see it differently."

The e-mail seemed to touch a chord with Bass, who wrote back that she resented Brady's sending it. She charged that Brady was letting a few unnamed individuals be the "sole source of information" she was taking in and processing, and that she was "sadly giving up (her) governance ability to others." Bass then included a pertinent line: "Financial supporters are wonderful and necessary but sometimes they don't realize that what they gain by their support is access, an open ear and open communication," Bass wrote. "It doesn't mean that someone gives up their soul and promises to do everything they want. I am not that person nor will I ever be."

But frustration and concern continued in some circles over the board's guiding principles revisions. On Oct. 1, Bass received a text message from Randy Gans, vice president of Security National, expressing concern about the Sept. 23 vote and asking to get together for coffee. "... it's about the guiding principles," Gans wrote. "They set the tone for land use policies. One wrong word here and one comma there and we will have a new version of the coastal act to live by in Humboldt County. I am very worried that is where we are heading."

A couple of days later, Bass texted back, asking if she could skip the coffee meeting. "If it helps to know, I've spent the last several days talking to about 16 people most of them I'm sure you know including Lee et cetera who probably are talking about the same concerns. I happen to agree on item 4 ..." Bass wrote back. About a week later, the board voted 4-1, with Lovelace dissenting, to again lop off the "restrictive language" discouraging the conversion of resource land and open spaces. The vast majority of e-mails the supervisors received from the general public on the issue had been in support of the Sept. 23 revisions.

The exchanges seem to underscore all that's perceived to be at stake in the General Plan Update process: a rural quality of life, the environment, the local economy, profit and regulation. They also hint at the pressures applied to those tasked with making the big decisions.

Michael Shires has watched more than a few general plan updates unfold and says it's never an easy process. An associate professor in Pepperdine University's School of Public Policy, Shires holds three advanced degrees, including an MBA in economics from the University of California at Los Angeles and a PhD in public policy analysis from the RAND graduate school. He also wrote a paper on the development of California counties as municipal governments.

"Planning is one of the hardest political processes because it asks the community to look into the future and decide what it wants to be," he says. "That's a hard thing to do."

California law requires that each of its 58 counties have a general plan and update it periodically — usually every 10 to 20 years, or so. The plan essentially translates a community vision into objectives, goals, policies and programs that will dictate the physical development of the county decades into the future. All plans must contain seven mandatory elements that outline the county's plans for dealing with land use, transportation, housing, conservation, open spaces, noise pollution and disaster preparedness. They can also contain a host of optional elements, touching on everything from historic preservation and recreation to economic development and agriculture.

After a county updates its general plan, it then must go through all its zoning ordinances — where the plan's rubber meets the road — to ensure they are consistent, and all major development projects looking for county approval will be similarly evaluated for their consistency with the overarching document.

The Institute for Local Government, a nonprofit that works to promote good government in partnership with the League of California Cities and the California State Association of Counties, says a well-defined general plan is the "starting point for fairness and predictability" in land use decisions.

The job of updating a general plan is often drawn out and tedious. "It's a relatively slow process," Shires says. "General plans tend to be very inclusive to give everyone a voice, which takes time." That slow and detailed work can get bogged down even more, Shires says, when there is turnover in county staff or the governing bodies overseeing the update. A recession, Shires says, can also slow things to a crawl.

All of that has been true of Humboldt County's update, which began in 2000 and has long faced criticism for being unwieldy, unresponsive and just plain slow. Humboldt last updated its general plan in 1984, and that was somewhat of a patchwork job, updating the plan that had been in place since the 1960s.

Mary Gearheart got an up-close look at the 1984 plan as a member of the Arcata Planning Commission, on which she worked with developers and environmentalists to try to interpret the county plan and its goals. "I just thought it was a mess," she says, adding that if you looked at county planners' copies of the 1984 GPU you would see their notes penciled in the margins, offering varying interpretations of what the plan meant. "It just had so many Band-Aids," she says.

Gearheart joined the Humboldt County Planning Commission in 1995 and was there for a series of long community forums throughout the county to gather input on the update in the early 2000s. Initially, Gearheart says, the county was supposed to hire an outside consultant to put together the update, which ambitiously sought to overhaul the 1984 document. But, she says, the county ended up dropping the consultant and the GPU landed in the hands of the planning commission. Gearheart and her fellow commissioners would go on to spend the next decade working on it, holding more than 100 hearings and receiving literally thousands of comments from the public. The process was slow, and many in the public lost interest.

Looking back, Gearheart says she wishes things could have moved faster. But, she says, the commission was limited by an understaffed planning department and the need to gather loads of public input from all reaches of the county. Part of the problem, she says, was that it took so long to gather public input and then incorporate it into a draft element, that by the time the commission put something on paper, members of the public had forgotten their involvement from years earlier. There were also some people from all political sides, Gearheart says, that didn't — and still don't — seem to understand the level of compromise necessary in coming up with a community vision. "I think they're misinterpreting being listened to and being agreed with," she says.

former planning commissioner

Bruce Emad, who joined the commission in 1997, says the commission worked very hard to put aside individual commissioners' political baggage and develop a plan that represented a ton of compromise. In 2009, the commission unveiled a draft of the plan update and spent the next three years holding 78 public hearings to gather input. Finally, in March 2012, the commission voted unanimously to approve the draft update and send it on to the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors. (Gearheart was the only commissioner who'd seen the process all the way through, as Emad and fellow long-time commissioner Jeff Smith both resigned in 2011.)

"Nobody was happy with that document, which means there was a lot of compromise and a lot of good stuff in there," he says. "I would say, by and large, we presented a pretty good document to the board. Now, could that document have been further reviewed and massaged and improved upon? I have no doubt. There is no such thing as a perfect document."

Gearheart agrees that the draft update the commission forwarded on to the supervisors reflected good compromise, and though she doubts anybody was happy with it, it was "as good a piece of work as a mixed group of people could sign off on." She resigned her commissioner's post a month after voting to turn the draft update over to the supervisors.

The 17-year commissioner says she knew at the time of her resignation that the GPU might still have a long road ahead of it, noting the new faces around her on commission and the board of supervisors. Of the five-member board, none had been in office for even half the GPU process. Lovelace all of a sudden became the board's elder statesman, having been elected in 2008. Bass and Sundberg took office in 2010, followed by Bohn and Fennell in 2012.

"I knew it was suddenly going to be an uphill battle to get anything accomplished," Gearheart says, noting that her apprehension had nothing to do with politics and everything to do with experience. "I used to say I wanted to get a new general plan while I was on the planning commission. Then, it was while I was alive. And now, I just don't say any of those things anymore."

Every once in a while,

Gearheart cozies up in front of the television to watch the planning commission work. Generally, she finds it a fascinating spectacle when they are discussing a project or a zoning change, pouring through evidence and reports and gathering input. But when the supervisors handed the GPU's Open Space and Conservation element back to the commission — at the request of the commission, the Humboldt Builders Exchange and the Humboldt Association of Realtors — Gearheart says she had to stop watching.

"It's pretty painful," she says of watching the current commission revise and change the work she and her fellow commissioners culled from years of public input. "I like progress. This was kind of going backwards."

Gearheart says she sees two overarching problems plaguing the commission: a lack of training and experience, and an overt political bent. In her day, Gearheart says commissioners worked hard to check their political baggage at the door and find common ground. She doesn't see that happening today. "I do feel it's a more politicized body," she says. "More than it should be."

But the larger issue might be the lack of experience and training. Emad recalled the wealth of knowledge his fellow commissioners brought with them into supervisors chambers, noting that many went through GPU processes on the city level before being appointed to the county position. Plus, he says, he, Smith and Gearheart had the benefit of starting the county GPU process from the beginning, being there for all that input and learning as the plan developed. Even then, he says, the learning curve was very steep.

Sitting in his H Street office, Hamblin says commissioners don't undergo any formal training before assuming office. Once appointed, Hamblin says the commissioners meet with a planning staff member who goes over some basics — like not to weigh in on a subject until hearing all the evidence — and counsels them on the Brown Act, California's open government law. And, he adds, new commissioners are given a book on the role of the planning commission and how to

The learning curve is very steep, and if you have no training and you just have your own biases and your own political bents, then you get in there and you're just going to make hash out of it.

— Bruce Emad,
former planning commissioner

be an effective commissioner. Every year or so, Hamblin says, commissioners are sent to a planning commission institute, where they take several days of courses on ethics, conflicts of interest, planning processes, best practices, the Brown Act and general plans. With the recent turnover, only two members of the current commission have attended one of these, according to Hamblin. The rest were given their book and a quick briefing and sent on their way.

A handful of the current planning commissioners also have extensive local land holdings and business interests, yet most haven't received any in-depth training on how to balance those with planning decisions or even when they might have a conflict of interest requiring that they recuse themselves from a vote.

E-mails received as a part of a Journal public records act request offer a glimpse into the learning curve of a new commissioner. Just weeks into the job, Noah Levy — a board member of the Environmental Protection Information Center appointed to the commission by Lovelace in late January — was called out by Ulansey at a Feb. 20 meeting after Ulansey seemed to take offense to comments Levy and Lovelace had posted to Facebook after the commission's Feb. 18 meeting.

On Feb. 24, Levy emailed Ulansey demanding an apology and an explanation. In the first lines of his email, Levy writes he considered the note to be "a private, confidential e-mail" to Ulansey alone. "This exchange," Levy wrote, "is between you and me only." In his reply, Ulansey proved a bit less naïve about his status as a public official and what that means for correspondences discussing county business.

"As you may or may not be aware, email correspondence sent or received by planning commissioners is unquestionably a public document and disclosable through a (California Public Records Act) request," Ulansey wrote, adding that his emails are frequently the subject of such requests. "I will not have a written discussion of this type when I'm not confident that confidentiality can legally be maintained."

Ulansey offered to meet Levy in person for a private conversation.

From the outside looking in, Emad says he's concerned with the current planning commission, its makeup and lack of experience. "The learning curve is very steep, and if you have no training and you just have your own biases and your own political bents, then you get in there and you're just going to make hash out of it," he says.

In a phone interview from Pepperdine, Shires says he isn't surprised to hear Humboldt's GPU is hitting some bumps in the road just as it was supposed to be entering its home stretch.

"You have a group of people who want to keep things the way they are, and a group of people who want change," he says. "There are always conflicting interests in any public process. That is common in general plan updates — there's always going to be that contention." And, Shires says, usually just one seat changing on a planning commission or a board of supervisors can be enough to send a GPU process in a different direction. In Humboldt, nine of 12 combined seats on the board and the commission have turned over in the last four years.

On March 10, after watching the planning commission wrestle with the GPU's Open Space and Conservation Element for 45 days only to make little progress, the supervisors unanimously agreed that sending the element back to the commission was a mistake. They agreed, essentially, to handle the GPU review themselves going forward.

That likely came as music to Gearheart's ears. But the decision comes with political risk, especially for Sundberg and Bass, as the process has shown that just about every possible decision — whether it be to change some aspect of the plan or leave it as is — is destined to upset some. It will also put the supervisors' knowledge and understanding of the very complicated GPU on full display.

"I'm sympathetic," Gearheart says, "but I think they just have to buckle down and take a stand. My hope is that the board will step up and do their job, because that's what it's going to take."

But the planning commission will get another crack at the document. Hamblin says that, after approval by the board, the GPU will head back to the commission to be reviewed for consistency. Looking for signs of optimism that the board and commission can bring this process to a close, one could point to a pair of email exchanges in recent weeks that hint at people attempting to find the common ground and forge the relationships necessary for compromise.

After Lovelace appointed Levy to the commission, EPIC Executive Director Gary Graham Hughes emailed Ulansey, taking issue with a Jan. 30 Lost Coast Outpost report by Ryan Burns — formerly of the Journal — dubbing EPIC as the "arch-nemesis" of HumCPR.

"I want you to know that there is no one on the EPIC team that really perceives of HumCPR as the 'arch-nemesis' of EPIC regardless of how some media voices might want to portray things ... we really think this could be a great opportunity to get some good work done!" Graham Hughes wrote, adding that he hoped he and Ulansey could get together "again" later in the month. Ulansey responded with a friendly email telling Graham Hughes not to be concerned about anything written by Burns, dubbing him a "partisan political propagandist."

"Frankly, despite the similarities to his drivel I am far more concerned about what I might step in while walking my dog," Ulansey wrote back. "Be assured that I value the positive relationship that we have established."

The second exchange came after Ulansey called Levy out publicly at the Feb. 20 commission meeting, when Levy wrote demanding an apology. It ended with the two commissioners politely saying they looked forward to sitting down and having a discussion.

And so the GPU dance goes on. The stakes are high and, if the 30 people who passionately addressed the supervisors March 10 are any indication, the public is once again engaged in the process. Whether that public participation will continue remains a question that could influence the ultimate shape the GPU takes.

Shires says these processes usually start with an engaged public, excited to weigh in on a county's future, but that engagement wanes as the process plods forward over a number of years, leaving those with a vested interest — developers, environmental groups and other advocates — fighting over the details.

"It sort of becomes political negotiation by attrition, so to speak," he says. ●

Bittersweet

Irish stout and chocolate cake

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Sure, everybody's Irish on St. Patrick's Day, but that doesn't mean everyone loves the food. Corned beef and cabbage is fine comfort food, briny and piping hot with soft potatoes, and my family didn't wait for March to cook it. But the heart-slowng food of ancestors who got up in the dark and worked until it turned dark again isn't for everyone — nor is a firm round of seedy soda bread, which so many Americans dutifully slather with butter once a year, silently wishing it was a scone.

What we do love on this side of the pond is a dark, creamy-topped porter, much of which will be downed on the 17th. (Skip the green beer. Have some dignity.) Porter cakes with spices and dried fruit are traditional in Ireland, but the heavy richness of Guinness Stout is an easy partner for chocolate cake.

This one, adapted from Baking Unplugged by Nicole Rees, is a user-friendly recipe that requires no electrical gadgets beyond your oven. The sharpness of the Guinness bakes out, making for a deeply chocolaty cake that's not too sweet with a grown-up bite. I let my kids lick the batter, full of bitter, cooked stout, off the mixing spoon and they ran from the kitchen, betrayed. A St. Patrick's Day dessert everybody loves and quiet time in the kitchen. That's a bit of luck right there.

Chocolate Stout Cake

2 tablespoons unsweetened cocoa to dust, plus 3/4 cup for the batter
 1 1/4 cup Guinness (measured without foam)
 1/3 cup dark molasses
 1 1/4 cup unsalted butter, very soft
 1 1/2 cup light brown sugar, firmly packed
 3 large eggs, room temperature
 1 2/3 cup all-purpose flour (whisk briefly before measuring)
 1 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
 1/2 teaspoon salt
 6 ounces dark chocolate chips (mini) a handful of powdered sugar

HUNGRY?

Use the GPS on your phone to see nearby spots, or search by neighborhood, type of food, price or even those that feature local ingredients.

It's all there.

m.northcoastjournal.com

 OF POLITICS, PEOPLE AND ART

Preheat your oven to 350 F. Grease a large bundt pan (spray is easy, but butter tastes better) and dust it with the 1/4 cup of cocoa as you would with flour, discarding the excess. This will keep it looking nice and dark when it comes out of the pan. Heat the beer and molasses in a saucepan, stirring, and simmer it a minute before putting it aside to cool. With a wooden spoon, beat the butter and brown sugar until creamy. Beat in one egg at a time very well.

In a dry bowl, whisk the flour, cocoa and salt. Use a fine mesh sieve to get any lumps out of the baking soda and baking powder and then whisk those into the flour mixture.

Is the Guinness and molasses concoction tepid yet? If so, alternately stir the flour and Guinness mixtures into the creamy butter/egg/sugar mix: flour, stout, flour, stout, flour. Stir until combined each time before adding the next part, but don't go crazy and make it tough. Finally, stir in the chocolate chips until evenly distributed.

Pour the batter into the bundt pan — do this by pouring in one spot and then tipping the pan to fill it evenly. That way you won't get a big hole from pockets of air. Knock out any little bubbles by holding the pan firmly and banging it on your counter a few times. If you want a nice, tall cake, make this the last loud noise in your kitchen until the cake is cooled.

Bake the cake for 45-50 minutes. A toothpick poked into the cake should not come out clean or gooey, but with a few crumbs on it. Let the cake rest in the pan for 20 minutes before popping it out onto a wire rack to cool further. If you want it just a wee bit warm, sprinkle it with powdered sugar just before serving. But it's just as marvelous the next day.

Shake, Rattle & Roll

Post-quake wildness

By Jennifer Savage

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Did you already forget about Sunday night's earthquake? If you don't have your emergency supplies prepped and packed, stop reading and take care of that, pronto. Ready? Good. Now let's talk about the supplies you'll need to get through the next week. First, plenty of water. You'll appreciate the hydration. (Don't raid the earthquake kit!) Second, a place to take naps, because you're looking at a lot of late nights. Third, a solid balance of protein, carbs and greens to keep body and mind strong. Finally, comfy dancing shoes. Whether you prefer freestyle booty-shaking or classic barn dancing — or something in between — this week's got it goin' on.

Thursday, trippy and tantalizing

This is not your usual gig. Legendary outsider artist The Space Lady, often seen busking on the streets of San Francisco in the '80s and '90s, has come out of retirement for a tour of her Casio-driven, phase-shifted, otherworldly originals and unrecognizable covers at the Siren's Song. She'll be joined by ambient jetsetter Ensemble Economique and femme synthpop quartet Blood Gnome. People are excited! Show starts at 9 p.m., is free and all ages.

Over in Arcata, Humboldt Brews presents Jelly Bread, soul and funk spread across an alt-rock foundation with a heap of Americana on top. It's opening for G. Love & Special Sauce later this month, so there's that. I feel like you will have a good time. Show's at 9:30 p.m., tickets are $10.

Friday, freeing and fantastical

You can dance if you want to — and you will want to because it's Soul Night! But wait! That's not all! You also get all vinyl. Humboldt Brews, 9 p.m., $5 (get your tickets early), 21-and-over.

You can dance if you want to — and you'll want to because the No Good Redwood Ramblers know how to inspire people to their feet with that foot-stompin' bluegrass sound it does so well.

In this case, the shindig in question is the 12th annual Pisces Party hosted by EPIC and Trees Foundation at the Beginnings Octagon in Redway. At 6 p.m., the event features a dinner and music by the Falling Rocks — get in on that for a $20-30 sliding scale at the door, or go straight to the party after 8 p.m. for a $10-20 sliding scale cover. All proceeds benefit the ongoing work of environmental protector, restorationist and Sacramento policy rabble-rouser Richard Gienger.

You can shpongle if you want to — and you might want to. The Arcata Theatre Lounge hosts SHPONGLE: The Museum of Consciousness Tour with Desert Dwellers. Shpongle is an English psychedelic music project formed in 1996 and considered to be one of the progenitors of the psybient genre, a genre combining world music with psychedelic trance and ambient. Do you feel the pull? Doors open at 9:30 p.m., tickets are $25/$30 at People's Records, Wildberries, The Works and online. This show is 21-and-over.

Saturday, St. Paddy's, a Happy Birthday, a benefit and beyond

Celebrate St. Patrick's Day — oh yeah, that — early with a Wild Irish Barn Dance at the Arcata Veterans' Hall starting at 7:30 p.m. Sue Moon will call to the enthusiastic tunes of Blake Ritter and Sam McNeill. All dances will be taught with no partner or experience necessary. Admission $7 general, $6 Humboldt Folklife Society members, students and seniors. Free for kids under 12.

Well, hey, look who's turning a whole decade old? Join Wild Otis and The Fickle Hillbillies for Humboldt Brews' 10th birthday party starting at 9 p.m. This is a free show and Hum Brews' proprietors promise, "Come dance and get wild listening to the music your parents warned you about. Guaranteed good times or your money back!"

More on the dancing/benefit/country front — Kenny Ray and the Mighty Rovers brings its passion for roots country, honkytonk and big-band swing to the Bayside Grange in a benefit for the Bayside Grange Kitchen Fund starting at

WHO: Karen Savoca and Pete Heitzman

WHEN: Sunday, March 16, 8 p.m.

WHERE: The Arcata Playhouse

TICKETS: $15, $13 members

7 p.m. If you need instruction, note that doors open at 6 p.m., with Steve and Clara McDonald offering a dance lesson at 6:15 p.m. It's $8 general, $5 students and free for kids 12 and under. Frolic the night away!

If you prefer the spiky sounds of a funk/jam band, you're also in luck because Liquid Kactus is celebrating the release of its new studio album, Straight Crooked, at the Jambalaya. Tickets are $10 and include a copy of the new album. The show starts at 9 p.m. with an opening set by skasters Meskalito. This gig is 21-and-over.

If none of the above lift your liner, what about a reggae-themed benefit for GMO Free Humboldt? Jah Sun, Rocker-T, Woven Roots, Ishi Dube, Bobby Hustle and more take over the ATL with doors at 9 p.m. and a cover of $20 for those 21-and-over.

Sunday, virtuosity exemplified

Here's a perfect Sunday show: Arcata Playhouse presents the electrifying, unique and always uplifting singer-songwriter combination of Karen Savoca and Pete Heitzman. Acoustic Guitar magazine calls Heitzman, "A true virtuoso of groove, with a sly touch that, combined with Savoca's in-the-pocket drumming and spectacularly soulful vocals, gives the duo the impact of a four-piece band." The acoustic soul blissfest begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 general, $13 Playhouse and Humboldt Folklife Society members and are available at Wildberries, Wildwood Music or online.

Or you could opt for Railroad Earth at the ATL. According to legend, when asked to describe the band's sound, mandolinist/vocalist John Skehan explains, "I always describe it as a string band, but an amplified string band with drums," while violinist/vocalist Tim Carbone jokes "We're a country and Eastern band!" Vocalist/guitarist/songwriter Todd Sheaffer offers "a souped-up string band? I don't know. I'm not good at this." What the band is good at is playing music. Doors open at 7 p.m., cost is $25 with advanced tickets available at Wildberries, People's Records, The Works, the ATL and ATL online. Show is 21-and-over.

Monday, a wee bit of madness

Finally, St. Patrick's Day. Personally, I have mixed feelings. I love a good party, but I also like snakes. We'll set the cultural/historical discussion aside for now, however, because you've got yourself what is sure to be an excellent time happening at the Logger Bar. From noon till midnight, Blue Lakers and others will celebrate with corned beef and cabbage, Guinness on tap, whiskey specials and, natch, The Vanishing Pints. It's a bar, so if you're under 21, go elsewhere. The Rebel Liberties will be flogging Flogging Molly tunes at the Lil' Red Lion's St. Patrick's Day bash at 6 p.m. for $3 (also 21 plus).

Tuesday, the intrigue continues

"Our new cassingle, Chillality, will be along for the ride on this brief March tour, which features two new tracks from our debut full-length, Wavelength Sovereignty, out later this year." So says Future Twin's press release about this midweek gig at the Jambalaya. You had me at "cassingle." The added bonus of describing the music as "PUNKadelic, moongayze, farmageddon or grandma rock" only makes me love it all the more. (Future Twins has shared stages with Thee Oh Sees, Lightning Bolt and akron/family, so I'm not alone in my fandom.) Catch the San Francisco-based act along with White Manna and Dolphin Star Temple Mystery School starting at 10 p.m. Cover's $6, 21-and-over.

Etc.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Eight Days a Week calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com. ●

You could rock down to Electric Avenue, but then you're just going to have to take it higher. Instead, head over to the Redwood Acres Racetrack on Saturday March 15. From 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. you can take an electric vehicle for a spin — for free! Pretend to be a race car driver and have your questions answered by the folks from Redwood Coast Energy Authority.

songs, masks and bunraku puppets.

Arcata's home-grown puppetry and theater group, Four on the Floor, stages a trio of folk tales in The Well at the World's End on Friday, March 14 at 7 p.m. and Saturday, March 15 at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Arcata Playhouse ($12, $10 for kids 12 and under) with Motorcycles are the epitome of cool — The Fonz totally had one. If you're not convinced, then The Black Lightning Motorcycle Club will sway you with their screening of the documentary Why We Ride at the Eureka Theater on Saturday March 15 at 7:30 p.m. That's a hefty dose of cool for only $10.

The Corned Beef Circuit

Booze always steals the limelight on St. Patrick's Day. Green beer and Jameson put that festive sparkle in your eye, but without food in your gut, that sparkle will quickly fade. On St. Patty's Day proper, The Shanty in Old Town Eureka and The Logger Bar in Blue Lake are both offering up Irish dishes to accompany their celebrations. Both shindigs start at noon and include corned beef and cabbage. The best part? They're free.

If the pub scene isn't your cup of tea, there are other options. On Saturday, March 15 at 5 p.m., the Westhaven Center for the Arts is having an Irish celebration with a dinner of corned beef, cabbage, red potatoes, carrots, fresh-baked Irish soda bread and dessert. Seabury Gould and Evan Morden will bust out some traditional Irish tunes after dinner, so put on your dancing shoes. Dinner is $20 and the concert is $10, but you can do both for the bargain price of $25.

If Westhaven is too far north, you can head to the River Lodge in Fortuna. The Knights of Columbus (really?) are hosting a Shenanigans Celebration on Sunday, March 16, at 5 p.m. You can enjoy a corned beef dinner and performances by the Emerald Coast Irish dancers for $20; if you're a kid, they day will only cost you $10.

Dust off your best green threads, put a clover in your hat and prepare yourself for an Irish-packed weekend. Erin go bragh!

Look, I'm on a Boat

You know what's better than boats in the water? Boats on land! Humboldt County has a rich maritime history and the Humboldt Bay Maritime Museum wants to tell you all about it at Historic Boat Day. On Saturday, March 15 from 3 to 7 p.m., the museum is hauling the Madaket and the Stephanie onto shore for tours and an interactive history lesson. The Golden Rule will also be on display and restoration volunteers from Zerlang & Zerlang Marine Services will be there to answer any questions you might have about the restoration process.

It's so much more than oohing and ahhing over boats, though. The maritime extravaganza includes a menu of barbecued oysters, corned beef and cabbage, a full cocktail bar and two auctions (live and silent). You can't have an extravaganza without music (them's the rules!), so local favorites Kingfoot and Kindred Spirits will be there to contribute to the ambience.

Set a course for the Zerlang & Zerlang Marine Services boat yard at 1493 Fay St., in Fairhaven. Admission is $30 for adults, $20 for seniors and $17 for children.

Reviews

300: RISE OF AN EMPIRE. Apparently 300 (2006), Zack Snyder's misbegotten, highly stylized adaptation of Frank Miller's graphic novel, made enough money and fans to drive the studio back to the well. Even though there is ostensibly a bigger story being told here, clearly profit, rather than art or narrative, is the motivating factor.

More a companion piece than a sequel, 300: Rise of an Empire tells the story of the greater conflict surrounding the events of the first movie. We learn, in a legitimately exciting opening sequence, that Greek warrior-king Themistocles (Sullivan Stapleton) incurred the wrath of a young Xerxes (Rodrigo Santoro, reprising his role) by mortally wounding Xerxes' father, Darius, at the Battle of Marathon. The Persian scion, motivated by grief, rage and the dubious advice of Greek-born Artemisia (Eva Green), commander of his father's naval forces, wanders the desert until he turns into the giant, gold "God-King" we know so well. He then, of course, proceeds to slaughter the titular Spartans at Thermopylae, while Artemisia turns her attentions to the forces of Themistocles.

Even in summary, the plot is hopelessly, needlessly convoluted. The excess of characters and elements threatens to pull the whole thing apart, and the wafer-thin writing doesn't do the story any favors. The voice-over, with its awkward purple prose, is occasionally laughably bad, failing altogether to do the work of advancing the story. As I mentioned, some of the action sequences are compelling and fun, but none of them rise to the level of the opening. And that bait and switch might be the worst insult of all. The first 10 minutes were exciting and stylish enough to sucker me into thinking I might enjoy the rest of the movie. But then in comes the actual storytelling and the air goes out of the room. R. 102m.

MR. PEABODY AND SHERMAN. Likely only the grandparents in the audience will remember the source material for this, or have any real connection to it (these characters were created what, 55 years ago?). But that, I'm happy to say, shouldn't matter much; the movie is charming and entertaining enough on its own merits. It may not belong in the pantheon of great animated features, but it is resoundingly better than most.

Mr. Peabody (voiced by Ty Burrell) is perhaps the most capable sentient being on the planet: a Nobel Prize winner, titan of industry, world-class athlete, chef and inventor who happens to be a dog in glasses. Having conquered the worlds of letters, finance and technology, Peabody decides to adopt a human boy. (As a pup, he was too wrapped up in his intellectual pursuits to make much of a case for himself as an attractive pet. The absence of a loving home life understandably left something of a void). After winning adoption rights in court, he throws himself into fatherhood, doing everything he can to provide for and enrich the life of his son, Sherman (Max Charles). This includes the construction and deployment of a time machine (the WABAC Machine) as tool for teaching history. When Sherman goes off to his first day of school, his uncanny, first-hand knowledge of George Washington lands him in a squabble with a classmate. Child Protective Services gets involved, threatening to remove Sherman from his home. Peabody arranges a dinner party with the classmates' parents, but Sherman messes with the WABAC, a time rift is created, etc.

The conclusion of the story feels a little rushed and predictable, but the stops we make along the way just about make up for it. The writing is clever, the characterizations lively and humorous, and any kids' movie that would actually take a shot at teaching some history — even if it's revisionist and chronologically questionable — stands out. PG. 92m.

Fall of the Khmers

Lessons for here and now?

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Empires always fall. After 200 glorious years (the Pax Romana), the Roman Empire took another two centuries to decline into obscurity. Despite his boast of an empire that would last 1,000 years, Hitler's Third Reich collapsed at the end of WWII. The British Empire, on which "the sun never set," surrendered to the reality of a new, democratic world order, ceding sovereignty to some 20 countries in as many years. The reasons for the failure of empires are many and various: conquest, plague, over-extended supply lines, monetary inflation and climate change. Usually more than one conspire to bring about the end.

The fall of the Khmer Empire, centered in present-day Cambodia, mostly resulted from an entirely preventable environmental catastrophe that offers lessons for us here and now in Northern California. From around 1150 to 1320 BC, the Khmer Empire was the most powerful political entity in Southeast Asia. In 1200, its capital in the Angkor complex was the world's largest pre-industrial urban complex, home to some quarter of a million people. The singular fame of Angkor Wat ("city temple"), commissioned by king Suryavarman II, who reigned from 1113 to 1150, derives from both its excellent state of preservation and its size — it's the largest religious structure in the world. A few years later, King Jayavarman VII outdid his predecessor by building the nearby city of Angkor Thom, his extraordinary stone homage to the Buddhist bodhisattva Avalokitesvara ... or perhaps to himself. Historians debate whether the 200 gigantic carved faces represent Jayavarman VII or a divinity.

So what happened? Why did the prosperous and vast empire collapse? Most archeologists believe the Khmers degraded their environment to the point where it could no longer support the populace. Angkor's prosperity can be summed up in one word: water. Without supplementary irrigation, the alluvial flatlands of Southeast Asia support only one rice crop per year (rice being the staple food there). In the 10th century, the Khmers created a vast system of reservoirs, moats and canals to store monsoon rains for use throughout the year, tripling the rice yield. Population growth led to demand for lumber, and unfortunately the best timber was located in the Angkor catchment area. With the trees gone, slopes eroded and the irrigation system silted up. Within a century, the empire was no more.

Sound familiar? Here in Humboldt County, we can see echoes of that far away, long-ago assault on nature. The Mattole was once a prime salmon spawning river. Extensive logging in its upper catchment area is the main reason for degradation of the riverbed, resulting in the near-extinction of Mattole coho (see Natalie Arroyo's "Last Call for Coho," July 7, 2011). The Mad River was renowned for 60-pound chinook just 80 years ago. My "Baron vs. Mountain" story outlines the near-destruction of Klamath fisheries by hydraulic mining operations (Sept. 8, 2011 and Sept. 15, 2011).

Actions have consequences. Over-exploitation of our natural resources may not be the only factor that brings down the American Empire (what's left of it), but it certainly won't make our future any more tenable. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) and his wife Louisa Rogers will give a presentation on Angkor Wat and other highlights of their recent Southeast Asia trip at an OLLI class on April 8. 826-5880.
